Victory Studios Hosts Film Production Workshop

On November 6, 7 and 8, industry veteran Tom Kane brought a three-day intensive Film/Video Workshop to Victory Studios in Seattle.

Kane, who has had a long and distinguished career as a producer, production manager and assistant director, produces workshops in cities around the world. His workshops are ideal for aspiring producers, production managers, assistant directors, screenwriters, actors, and anyone wishing to explore a career in film and video production.

Said Conrad Denke, president of Victory Studios and a Seattle workshop participant, "You can find a lot of books about production by people who sound like they know what they're talking about, but have never been on a set. You can go to a lot of seminars conducted by people who've never made a serious movie. I'm sure they're all well meaning, but there's no substitute for real 'high-end' experience.

"Tom Kane makes you feel like you're really there, making a real movie. He takes you through the 'nuts and bolts' of setting up, from script breakdowns to location scouting. He explains how a real set works, and warns you about critical pitfalls. And, with his seemingly infinite anecdotes, he makes the learning fun."

Kane's Film Production Workshop will be returning to Seattle next year.
